IDEM warns of high local ozone levels

State issues Air Quality Action Day for regions including Wabash County

By ROB BURGESS
Wabash Plain Dealer Editor

On Thursday, the Indiana Department of Environmental Management (IDEM) warned of elevated ozone levels in Wabash County and the surrounding area.

An Air Quality Action Day (AQAD) was issued for three Indiana regions for Friday, said public information officer Barry Sneed.

This warning included the regions of North Central Indiana, including St. Joseph and Elkhart counties; Northwest Indiana, including Lake, Porter and LaPorte counties; and Northeast Indiana, including Allen, Huntington and Wabash counties.

"These regions are made up of multiple counties near larger metropolitan areas that typically see higher ozone readings when weather conditions are right for ozone development. Wabash County is associated with the Northeast Indiana region so it is included in any forecasts for the Fort Wayne area," said Sneed, on Friday.

Sneed said ground-level ozone is formed when sunlight and hot weather combine with vehicle exhaust, factory emissions and gasoline vapors. Ozone in the upper atmosphere blocks ultraviolet radiation, but ozone near the ground is a lung irritant that can cause coughing and breathing difficulties for sensitive populations.

"While the change in weather has been rather abrupt, this ozone event is due to a high pressure system off the east coast that is bringing warmer than normal temperatures, sunny skies and light winds into Indiana. These conditions often allow for the production and transportation of ozone throughout Indiana," said Sneed.

Sneed said IDEM examines weather patterns and current ozone readings to make daily air quality forecasts. AQADs generally occur when weather conditions such as light winds, hot and dry air, stagnant conditions, and lower atmospheric inversions trap pollutants close to the ground.

"There is nothing to suggest that Air Quality Action Days will be common throughout the rest of the spring and summer," said Sneed. "These events are dependent on weather conditions."

Sneed said those in the affected areas may "help reduce ozone while remaining safe during the COVID-19 health crisis by making changes to daily habits." Locals can drive less by carpooling, using public transportation, walking, biking or working from home when possible; combine errands into one trip; avoid refueling their vehicle or using gasoline-powered lawn equipment until after 7 p.m.; keeping their engine tuned and not letting their engine idle; and conserving energy by

Local churches navigate re-opening plans for services

Houses of worship handling masking, sanitizing, singing, communion differently

By ROB BURGESS
Wabash Plain Dealer Editor

When the COVID-19 pandemic began over a year ago, one of the most immediate recognizable changes involved church services canceling in-person worship and moving online.

Over the past few months, though, local houses of worship have begun opening their doors to parishioners again, and each has taken steps at their own speeds.

For example, the Wabash Church of the Brethren moved into the second phase of their re-opening on Sunday, May 16, said administrative assistant Michelle Roudebush.

Roudebush said during this phase of the re-opening, the church would be requiring a mask while in the building and encouraging social distancing.

Roudebush said they would be refraining from congregational singing.

"We are planning to have fully vaccinated song leaders sharing during this phase," said Roudebush.

Roudebush said they were encouraging people to visit with one another outside, after the service, as the weather permits and collecting offerings in the back of their building, in a marked box.

Roudebush said they were planning to move into the third phase of their re-opening plans starting Sunday, June 6. These changes will include recommending but not requiring a face mask while in the building, continuing to encourage social distancing, returning to congregational singing and offering plates being passed again.

Roudebush said during their second Sunday opening – which will be Sunday, May 23 – they were planning to offer coffee and juice after the worship service near the tree outside their building, weather permitting.

"This will allow us an opportunity to visit and fellowship with one another outdoors. For this time outside, we will not require face masks to be worn but will continue to recommend that you wear them unless actively drinking," said Roudebush.

Roudebush said they wanted to ensure that those who still sought a virtual option would have that available going forward.

"We want to emphasize that our worship time is important to our life as a congregation, while also acknowledging that there continues to be a risk in gathering together. We will continue to offer a streaming option for those who are not yet ready to return to in-person services, as well as continuing to provide a weekly written worship guide," said Roudebush. "It is our hope and prayer, that whether returning to in-person services, streaming our service online, or using the written worship guide, that all members and attenders of our congregation will be able to continue worshipping God together, continue to share in the message of Jesus Christ, and continue to work together to share the message of God's transforming love to our community, our nation and our world."

On Friday, Christ United Methodist Church Pastor Tom Richards said they "had been worshipping in our sanctuary for some time using masks and social distancing."

"We also live-stream on Facebook," said Richards.

Richards said starting Thursday, July 1 they will begin to remove those restrictions "and return to normal."

Lincolnville United Methodist Church Pastor John Cook said they had been back to in-person services since February.

"We do provide mask for people who need or want them. Hand sanitizer is provided. Communion is done by individual cups and we will continue that practice," said Cook. "For offering we have baskets that people can put their tithes and offering in."

Asbury Country Church Pastor Mike Bullick said masks are now optional and they "encourage social distancing between families in the pews."

"We will resume normal offerings, greet your neighbor and Holy Communion beginning this Sunday," said Bullick. "Respect for one another's preferences is a key issue."

St. Bernard's Church parish secretary Ann Unger said they are following directives from the Diocese of Fort Wayne-South Bend.

"Anyone, vaccinated or not, with cough or fever should remain home," said Unger. "Masks or face coverings are now optional at public liturgies. It is still recommended that unvaccinated individuals still wear masks. Safe distancing is no longer required, however, it is encouraged that, for the time being, a part of each church still be specifically set aside with safe distanced seating at Mass to accommodate those more comfortable with that arrangement."

Ungers said since surface and water-borne transmission are not viewed as common means of viral spread, holy water stoups, and baptismal fonts should be filled again.

"Choral and cantor singing no longer have any restrictions," said Unger.

Unger said as of Friday, June 11, the dispensation from the obligation to attend Mass will be lifted throughout the state of Indiana.

ISDH reports 81st local COVID-19 death

Wabash County remains in blue advisory level for third week

By ROB BURGESS
Wabash Plain Dealer Editor

On Thursday, the Indiana State Department of Health (ISDH) reported the 81st local COVID-19 death in Wabash County.

Last month, a lower number of cases has pushed Wabash County's COVID-19 advisory level from the ISDH from yellow, the second-lowest level, to blue, the lowest level, during their weekly dashboard update.

Last week, Wabash County's positive rating was up slightly, and nearly every other neighboring county had moved back to yellow status.

Those increases seem to have subsided as Wednesday's weekly update showed Wabash County holding

YMCA to offer summer meals

Free breakfasts and lunches available from June 1 to Aug. 6

By ROB BURGESS
Wabash Plain Dealer Editor

To meet the challenge of increased food insecurity in the region, especially among children, local groups are offering free summer lunches and breakfasts.

The latest is the Wabash County YMCA, which announced their free breakfast and lunch program for children ages 18 and under, said CEO Dean Gogolewski.

The YMCA's program times will be from 8 to 9 a.m. for breakfast and 11 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. for lunch Mondays through Fridays, from Tuesday, June 1 to Friday, Aug. 6, 500 S. Cass St.

"The YMCA is committed to meeting the needs of our community and helping fight food insecurity is one way we can help," said Gogolweski. "Many of the children rely on school meals to provide nourishment and when school is out, many go hungry."

Pete Jones speaks for History Hunters on Johnny (Ole) Olson

Local historian presents every fourth Tuesday of the month

STAFF REPORT

Local historian, Pete Jones, will be presenting on the Wabash County Museum’s Facebook Live for their upcoming History Hunters event to be held at 11 a.m. Tuesday, May 25, according to director of guest experience Bailey Hobbs. “Jones’s talk this month will be about Johnny (Ole) Olsen. He was born in Peru, but his family moved to Wabash when he was just a year old. Olsen, along with his sidekick, Chic Johnson, formed America’s last great vaudeville team, Olsen & Johnson. He died in 1963, and now is nearly forgotten,” said Hobbs. Jones presents every fourth Tuesday of the month on the Museum’s Facebook. This presentation, along with previous History Hunters programs, is available for playback on the Wabash County Museum’s website and Facebook page under the Live tab. “The Wabash County Museum can share local stories

Dylan turns 80, while Dylanologists argue about his faith

Night after night, Bob Dylan’s 1979 gospel concerts at San Francisco’s Warfield Theatre made news for all the wrong reasons, according to angry fans. The Nov. 11 show that year opened with Dylan roaring into “Gotta Serve Somebody” from “Slow Train Coming,” the first of what Dylanologists called his “born-again” albums. “You may be a businessman or some high-degree thief,” he sang. “They may call you doctor, or they may call you chief, but you’re gonna have to serve somebody. ... Well, it may be the Devil, or it may be the Lord, but you’re gonna have to serve somebody.” To add insult to injury, these concerts included fiery sermons by Dylan, while he avoided the classic songs that made him a legend. “I was 19 years old and that was my first Dylan concert,” recalled Francis Beckwith, who teaches Church-State Studies at Baylor University. “The atmosphere was highly charged. Some people booed or walked out. ... There were people shouting, ‘Praise the Lord!’ but you could also smell people smoking weed.”

Terry Mattingly

Society – he announced his return to Catholicism. To mark Dylan’s milestone birthday, Beckwith is publishing online commentaries on what he considers his 80 most important songs. The Top 10: “Like a Rolling Stone,” “My Back Pages,” “Stuck Inside of Mobile With the Memphis Blues Again,” “Mr. Tambourine Man,” “Visions of Johanna,” “Tangled Up in Blue,” “Blowin’ in the Wind,” “Precious Angel,” “It’s Alright, Ma (I’m Only Bleeding)” and “Desolation Row.” Beckwith considered three factors: popularity, lasting cultural significance and, finally, whether each song was “something I could listen to over and over.” He stressed that Dylan’s entire canon includes images and themes rooted in scripture and faith. “When you listen to Dylan, you can hear that he has been reading classic literature his whole life. References to Dante and St. Augustine are as likely to show up as commentary about politics,” said Beckwith. “You also see signs of his Jewish faith and heritage, of course. But he was quoting the New Testament before his conversion to Christianity. ... Dylan has also soaked up generations of American music – especially folk, gospel and blues.” It’s important to see the tension, throughout Dylan’s life, between blunt “finger-pointing protest songs” and poetic work about culture, faith and his personal life. The “born-again” albums, Beckwith noted, included many songs commenting on current events, as did the ‘60s classics that made Dylan a superstar. Critics who said Dylan “went secular” after 1981 were not paying attention. “Take ‘Infidels,’” said Beckwith, referring to a 1983 album. “It’s packed with scripture, even though critics said it showed that he had outgrown his born-again faith. ... They were looking for evangelical preaching, and instead, it was full of medieval Christian images and literary references. He went over their heads.” The title song from a recent Dylan disc – “Tempest” in 2012 – is about the Titanic. But there is this twist in the lyrics: “The captain, barely breathing, kneeling at the wheel. Above him and beneath him, fifty thousand tons of steel ... In the dark illumination, he remembered bygone years. He read the Book of Revelation and he filled his cup with tears.” Dylan concludes that “there is no understanding ... the judgment of God’s hand.” Yes, this song is about the sinking of the Titanic. But it’s clear Dylan has created a religious narrative about “the arrogance of man” and the “brokenness of our world,” said Beckwith. “Dylan is deeply skeptical about human motives and actions, including his own,” he said. “He keeps returning to ancient truths, traditions and books that many ignore. He isn’t saying that we need to destroy things, like many heroes of the counterculture claimed. Dylan is saying we have failed to live up to those old truths and traditions. He wants to learn from the past.” Terry Mattingly leads GetReligion.org and lives in Oak Ridge, Tennessee. He is a senior fellow at the Overby Center at the University of Mississippi.

Salamonie Preschool offers ‘B is for Berry’ program on Wednesday, June 9

Children ages 2 to 5 and their adults are welcome to attend the class

STAFF REPORT

Preschool-age children and their adults are invited to Salamonie Preschool’s “B is for Berry” on Wednesday, June 9 at 3691 S. New Holland Road, Andrews, according to interpretive naturalist Teresa Rody.

“Explore berries and learn which animals enjoy eating them,” said Rody. Children ages 2 to 5 and their adults are welcome to attend the class from 10 to 11:30 a.m. at Salamonie Interpretive Center located in Lost Bridge West State Recreation Area, Andrews. “Each program is designed to enhance the preschooler’s basic education, including music, crafts, social interaction and time outdoors, always with a nature-related theme,” said Rody.

The program fee is $2 per child. Advance registration is appreciated. Register by calling Upper Wabash Interpretive Services at 260-468-2127. “Note that details of this event may be subject to change based on the state’s response to COVID-19,” said Rody. For more information on other UWIS programs, see dnr.IN.gov/uwis or facebook.com/upperwabash, or call 260-468-2127.

its blue designation, with cases falling. Nearly every surrounding county is now again in the blue category, as well.

News of these lowered levels of cases comes as vaccinations have increased locally and statewide. As of Friday, the ISDH reported that 9,144 people in Wabash County have been fully vaccinated. The ISDH reported for the zip code for Wabash, 46992, a total of 32.7 percent of those age 12 and older have been fully vaccinated, which is slightly below the state average of 40.8 percent.

As of Friday, a total of 4,965,905 doses have been administered in Indiana. This includes 2,572,225 first doses and 2,393,680 individuals who are fully vaccinated. The fully vaccinated number represents individuals who have received a second dose of the Pfizer or Moderna vaccines and those who received the single Johnson & Johnson vaccine.

Parkview Wabash Hospital President Marilyn J. Custer-Mitchell said the Wabash vaccination site at the Honeywell Center was "going well."

"After the first half-hour or so of each clinic day, we have very little wait time typically. Most days, all the appointments are close to being full," said Custer-Mitchell.

Custer-Mitchell said the waitlist, which had been a factor early in the vaccination efforts, was rendered moot by the opening of eligibility to lower age ranges.

"We are seeing more people cancel or no show as they have received a shot elsewhere or prefer a different vaccine," said Custer-Mitchell.

The Moderna vaccine is being administered at the Wabash clinic.

"We have no issue with supplies at this time," said Custer-Mitchell.

On Friday, the ISDH announced that 801 additional Hoosiers have been diagnosed with COVID-19 through testing at state and private laboratories. That brings to 738,961 the number of Indiana residents now known to have had the novel coronavirus following corrections to the previous day's dashboard.

To date, 13,130 Hoosiers are confirmed to have died from COVID-19, an increase of 22 from the previous day. Another 417 probable deaths have been reported to date based on clinical diagnoses in patients for whom no positive test is on record.

A total of 3,470,790 unique individuals have been tested in Indiana, up from 3,466,297 on Thursday. A total of 10,282,891 tests, including repeat tests for unique individuals, have been reported to the state Department of Health since Feb. 26, 2020.

To find testing sites around the state, visit www.coronavirus.in.gov and click on the COVID-19 testing information link.

Hoosiers age 12 and older can receive a COVID-19 vaccine; individuals younger than age 18 are eligible for the Pfizer vaccine only. To find a vaccination clinic near you, visit <https://ourshot.in.gov> or call 211 if you do not have access to a computer or require assistance. Appointments are preferred, but walk-ins are accepted at most sites.

Appointments and walk-ups are welcome at the former Roosevelt High School in Gary, which is offering both the Johnson & Johnson and Pfizer vaccines.

Integrity is key after mask mandate is lifted

If you lie, you could still die. Or someone else could. Consider this a reminder of how vital individual responsibility has become now that Gov. Tim Walz has lifted the statewide face mask mandate. Walz announced the move last Thursday after federal officials said those fully vaccinated against COVID-19 no longer needed to mask in most situations.

Minnesotans who aren't vaccinated should still mask up. But with no easy way to check, it's up to those who haven't gotten the shot yet to act responsibly. And too many of them are motivated by anti-masking political rhetoric.

Forgoing a face covering before being fully vaccinated doesn't strike a blow against tyranny. Instead, it's fundamentally dishonest and reckless, putting family, friends and communities at risk with the virus continuing to circulate in Minnesota and so many people yet to be immunized.

The U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) made last week's announcement on masks with frustratingly little notice. The decision rests on a reassuring foundation – the vaccines are extraordinarily effective and safe.

But because there is no practical way for businesses or others to verify vaccination status, the state is now essentially on the honor system with vaccination rates still well below what's needed to stifle viral spread – generally estimated at between 70 percent and 90 percent.

In Minnesota, 61.7 percent of those eligible have gotten at least one shot, according to the state Department of Health. The figure for those who have completed the vaccination series is lower, at 53.3 percent. That's two shots for the Pfizer and Moderna vaccines, and one for the Johnson & Johnson version.

Optimists argue that lifting the mask mandate might give Minnesota's vaccine holdouts additional incentive to act. The previous policy, which stipulated that vaccinated individuals still had to wear a mask, might have been a deterrent. With no mask needed afterward, the thinking goes, some might now go get the shot.

Skeptics – count the Star Tribune Editorial Board among them – have a less charitable view. COVID disinformation and the politicization of masks have enveloped public health in a toxic atmosphere. That may allow some to wrongly justify dishonesty about their vaccine status and not wearing a mask.

Those guilty of this might be OK with their own COVID risk and deficit of personal integrity. But if they become infected, they could spread the virus to those who aren't yet vaccinated. Or those who can't yet be vaccinated – mainly kids under age 12.

Lifting the mask mandate should have been a goal to work toward. Walz had it right initially when he announced on May 6 that the mask requirement would end by July 1 or sooner if Minnesota hit a 70 percent vaccination rate. Doing so would have left a critical protection in place while thousands more Minnesotans got vaccinated, including the newly eligible 12-15 age group.

The CDC's abysmal rollout of the new mask policy did not reflect well on its new director, Dr. Rochelle Walensky, a President Joe Biden appointee. The sudden change created confusion for businesses and parents of children too young to be vaccinated, and the science behind the move has yet to be adequately explained.

Communications and coordination are critical skills for someone in Walensky's position. She needs to do better.

Are mere citizens trustworthy?

Who's in charge here? In a constitutional republic, the answer should be obvious. The people are. We have inalienable rights merely by our existence as human beings, and to protect them we create a limited government, and those who inhabit its hallowed halls are there to represent us, not dictate to us.

But that is the civics answer, which is barely even taught in schools anymore, let alone used as a touchstone by the officious functionaries who take such delight in hectoring the commoners.

Such as Rochelle Walensky, director of the U.S. Centers for Disease Control, who recently made the shocking-to-some, common-sense-to-others announcement that people who are fully vaccinated do not need to wear masks outdoors and can mostly avoid wearing them indoors.

"What we're really doing," she said, "is empowering individuals to make decisions about their own health."

Oh, my. They are empowering us. I would have thought it's supposed to be the other way around, but never mind. I am pleased to learn that I am in charge of my own health. Neither Adam Smith nor Friedrich Hayek will be rolling over in their graves for a change.

But, wait.

Faced with a storm of anguished howls from those quite comfortable professing their allegiance to the collective, Walensky felt compelled to go on all the Sunday talk shows to defend the CDC's decision.

"... [T]his is not permission for widespread removal of masks," she said on one of them.

Whew. Thank goodness she cleared that up. Wouldn't want a hunger for freedom and autonomy to seep into the public consciousness. Let's not go around believing we have permission to live our lives.

While this national drama is playing out, Indiana has been wrestling with how to fit its COVID response into its convoluted Home Rule protocols.

Home Rule is just the official name for local control, sensibly giving communities the authority to deal with local issues using all their available resources. State officials always preach Home Rule but usually take away more local control than they grant.

This past session, for example, the General Assembly set statewide rules for communities trying to establish wind and solar energy and told all Hoosier police departments how they must deal with transparency and accountability. It even forbade Indianapolis from expanding its bus service, despite the project passing a voter referendum.

But it did approve measures – then overrode Gov. Holcomb's vetoes of them – allowing the General Assembly to call itself into special session if needed to check the governor's emergency orders and permitting city and county councils to override overly zealous edicts by appointive health officials.

The novelty of it. The decisions directly affecting citizens will ultimately be in the hands of legislators, the elected officials closest to the people and the most subject to their control.

Such audaciousness cannot stand, so naturally the issue will go the Indiana Supreme Court, and the final decision will be based on the will of five justices who were not elected and answer only to their own consciences.

On one of those Sunday talk shows, the host harangued Walensky about the anarchy about to be unleashed on the hapless citizenry. What about the poor, beleaguered business owners who have to decide whether to drop mask requirements or to demand proof of vaccination for those who try to enter maskless?

The unthinkable alternative, the host suggested, would be to rely on an honor system, and do we really trust each other enough to make that work?

Heaven help us that such a question would even be asked.

If we can't trust each other – our businesses to decide how to operate, our local officials to set reasonable rules, our friends and neighbors to look out for us and care about each other – there is no point to it all.

It wouldn't matter who's in charge, because there would be nothing to be in charge of.

Earmarks lubricate congressional gears

The wary and partial revival of earmarks by congressional Republicans is, on balance, welcome. This is so partly because it illustrates how coping with the transaction costs of democracy is often a matter of balancing the admirable with the regrettable.

For those of you who sometimes forget things that once seemed unforgettable, long ago – about a decade ago – many in Congress, especially conservatives, decided that earmarks were a scandal, the elimination of which would make a mighty improvement in national governance. Earmarks are spending items directed by individual members of Congress to particular state or local projects.

Members became promiscuous with this practice, until it became notorious, thanks to one such project, the 2005 "bridge to nowhere," which would have connected, at a cost of $223 million, an Alaskan community of 8,900 to its airport on a nearby island with a population of 50, thereby sparing fliers a 15-minute commute by ferry and a cost of $6 per car. Five years later, members of the tea party faction – speaking of forgotten phenomena – made the elimination of earmarks central to their quixotic crusade to shrink the cost of the federal government without touching actually important sources of federal spending, the entitlement programs – Social Security, Medicare, etc. – that are inconveniently popular.

Like problem drinkers foreswearing demon rum, Republicans banned earmarks. Bemused Democrats lacked enthusiasm for this political version of Prohibition: They argued, plausibly, that members of Congress know better than executive branch agencies do their states' or districts' needs. Besides, earmarks help incumbents ingratiate themselves with constituents. When critics of earmarks threatened to "expose" earmarkers by publicizing the bacon they bring home, the earmarkers exclaimed, like Br'er Rabbit, "Please don't throw me into the briar patch."

Since then, many Republicans have regretted their unilateral disarmament. Some of them reason, correctly, that banning earmarks has exacerbated the aggrandizement of the executive branch and the marginalization of Congress. When a political course-correction is deemed necessary, a language modification often seems prudent, so earmarks have been re-branded as "community-focused grants."

House Republicans recently voted 102-84 to restore renamed earmarks. It will be interesting to see how many of the 84 stick to abstinence while the majority of their caucus returns to sinning. The Senate Republican caucus has voted to continue the ban on earmarks. The ban is, however, oxymoronic – a permissive prohibition: It is non-binding, and some Republican senators say they will begin requesting earmarks.

The kerfuffle about earmarks has supposedly been about controlling spending, concerning which it will have no noticeable effect. Rep. Tom Cole, an Oklahoma Republican who supports earmarks, notes that at its peak in the first decade of this century, the practice involved 1.3 percent of federal spending. He says that restoring earmarks is a "carve out" that will not increase spending because earmarks do not raise the cap on discretionary spending, which is only about 30 percent of the budget.

Cole, who studied at the University of London, and who has a Yale master's degree and a PhD in British history from the University of Oklahoma, also has had the education that comes from 10 terms in the House. There he has seen how earmarks facilitate the lawmaking process. Legislative bargaining is additive: If you support my projects A and B, I will support your projects C and D. You might regret that this is a permanent driver of government growth, but you might as well regret the law of gravity. Furthermore, Cole says that earmarks embedded in important legislation can give members parochial incentives to cast difficult votes for measures that are in the national interest.

It is an axiom of moral seriousness: If you will an end, you must will the means to that end. So, if you desire a less polarized Congress, one with a more collaborative and transactional ethos, you should at least tolerate earmarks as grease that lubricates congressional gears.

Sen. Josh Hawley, a Missouri Republican, opposes earmarks for an impeccably populist reason: "Voters hate them." He means, presumably, that voters hate earmarks that benefit voters other than themselves. When the steel tariffs imposed in 2018 by Hawley's hero, the previous president, injured Missouri's Mid Continent Nail Corp., Hawley told that company's parent that he was seeking for Mid Continent an exemption from the national tariff policy: "I continue to urge the Department of Commerce to grant it quickly." The ethical distinction between this request for special treatment and a request for an earmark is perhaps clear to Hawley.

Federal government spending craze

The Biden Administration along with Congress is on a spending craze that will continue annual deficits of over $1 trillion.

The $1.9 trillion COVID-19 stimulus bill enacted in March and the previous COVID-19 stimulus bill in 2020 were necessary to combat the adverse impact of the pandemic.

The $2.2 trillion infrastructure program proposed by the administration is highly bloated with non-infrastructure elements. It should be restricted to repairing roads, replacing bridges and expanding broadband. This could reduce the infrastructure package to well below $1 trillion.

Biden's "American Families Plan" of $1.8 trillion includes funds for child care, family and medical leave, universal pre-k, and free community college. It should be postponed and looked at later.

As an aside, the current extra $300 per week in federal unemployment compensation should be discontinued by the states. It is keeping people from entering the workforce and significantly hurting companies and businesses that need employees.

The current administration's spending spree has to be curtailed, and they need to effectively and efficiently prioritize and target their spending.

It’s OK to slurp your vegetables

When spring and summer bring warm days, I keep our meals light and garden-fresh with a minimum of cooking. Cold soups, abundant salads, tapas and antipasti are elevated to dinner course level, providing simple and refreshing nourishment, while greedily taking advantage of the farmers market bounty.

Lynda Balslev

The trick to eating this fresh is to provide enough substance to call these dishes a main course – and for this, I often turn to shrimp. Shrimp are versatile and packed with protein, iron and omega-3 fatty acids, adding the necessary nutritional oomph to top off a light meal. They require mere minutes to cook in a pan or on the grill, which is ideal for busy schedules and keeping the heat out of the kitchen. They can also be poached ahead of time and served chilled, such as in this gazpacho soup.

Gazpacho is a cold tomato soup of Spanish origin that is traditionally blended with an arm’s-length list of vegetables. Despite the abundance of produce, gazpacho is unfailingly filling and satisfying – even for meat eaters – and a perfect antidote to a warm day. This version takes inspiration from a shrimp cocktail, with the tomato juice base infused with cocktail sauce ingredients, such as horseradish, lemon and Worcestershire sauce. Freshly poached and chilled shrimp are draped over the rim of the glass to top this soup off and provide protein. You can serve this as a main course or divvy it up between small glasses for a light appetizer. I can’t think of a better way to slurp my vegetables, can you?

Shrimp Cocktail Gazpacho
Active Time: 20 minutes
Total Time: 20 minutes,
plus chilling time
Yield: Serves 4 to 6

Soup:

- 4 cups tomato juice
- 1 1/2 cups grape tomatoes, chopped
- 1 medium red onion, finely chopped
- 1 English cucumber with skin, seeded, diced
- 1 large celery stalk, diced
- 1 medium carrot, finely diced
- 1 medium red bell pepper, stemmed and seeded, diced
- 1 small jalapeño pepper, stemmed and seeded, minced
- 1 large garlic clove, minced
- 1/4 cup fresh lemon juice
- 2 tablespoons fresh lime juice
- 1 tablespoon extra-virgin olive oil
- 2 teaspoons drained prepared horseradish, or to taste

- 2 teaspoons Worcestershire sauce
  - 1 teaspoon Tabasco sauce
  - 1 teaspoon kosher salt
  - 1/2 teaspoon freshly ground black pepper
  - 1/4 cup Italian parsley or cilantro leaves, chopped
- Shrimp:
- 1 pound jumbo (16/20) shrimp, peeled and deveined, tails intact
  - 1 lemon, quartered
  - 2 bay leaves
  - 2 teaspoons salt

Combine all of the soup ingredients except the parsley in a large bowl. Mix to blend and then taste for seasoning. Cover the soup and refrigerate for at least 2 hours or up to 6 hours to chill and allow the flavors to develop.

While the soup is chilling, poach the shrimp. Fill a large saucepan with water. Add the lemon, bay leaves and salt. Bring to a boil over high heat. Remove the pan from the heat and add the shrimp. Cover the pot and let stand until the shrimp turn pink and are opaque through the center, 4 to 5 minutes. Drain the shrimp and rinse under cold water to stop the cooking process. Refrigerate until use.

Remove the gazpacho from the refrigerator 15 minutes before serving. Stir in the parsley and taste again for seasoning. Ladle the soup into glasses or small bowls, and drape the shrimp over the edges. Garnish with a celery stalk if desired.

FTC: Cryptocurrency scams rose 1,000% in the past year and cost consumers at least $80M

If there is a perfect storm for cryptocurrency scam victims, it’s happening right now. Uberrich people have touted the speculative investment, making others feel like fools if they don’t get in on the game. Tesla mogul Elon Musk has been a champion of cryptocurrency, although he backed off bitcoin mining recently, citing environmental concerns.

Despite being highly volatile, the price of cryptocurrencies has surged to record levels.

Finally, cryptocurrency enthusiasts have a great command over social media platforms, enabling them to relentlessly plug the investment, which is pushing up prices. Scammers know that many people suffer from “FOMO,” or the fear of missing out. This is the kryptonite for unsophisticated investors.

Add all those forces together and you have a tenfold increase in reported losses in the past 12 months from victims of cryptocurrency-related investment scams, according to new data from the Federal Trade Commission (FTC).

“This trend is really striking,” said Emma Fletcher, a program analyst with the FTC’s Bureau of Consumer Protection. “It’s pretty alarming and concerning. So we definitely want to bring attention to this issue so that people can take steps to make sure that this doesn’t happen to them.”

Consumers have reported losing more than $80 million to cryptocurrency investment scams, the data shows. The FTC said it received nearly 7,000 scam reports in the last quarter of 2020 and the first quarter of 2021, 12 times the number reported over the same period a year earlier. The median amount consumers lost in the scams was $1,900. That is nearly 1,000 percent more in reported losses compared to the same period a year earlier, the agency said.

Let me put the loss for cryptocurrency scam victims in perspective. The median loss reported to the FTC for fraud generally is about $400, Fletcher said.

Adults 20 to 49 were more than five times more likely than older age groups to report losing money on cryptocurrency investment scams, the FTC said. People in their 20s and 30s lost more money to investment scams than any other form of fraud, and more than half of their losses were the result of crypto cons. Although people 50 and older were far less likely to report losing money on cryptocurrency scams, their losses were higher – a median of $3,250.

Devotees say bitcoin, Dogecoin and other cryptocurrencies will someday revolutionize the way electronic transactions are handled. It’s super cool to be in cryptocurrency.

“There’s also a lot of high pressure to this market where people are like, ‘You’ve got to get in now. Don’t wait. Don’t question it,’” said Joe Rotunda, director, enforcement division at the Texas State Securities Board. “But investors need to be on guard.”

In March, the North American Securities Administrators Association (NASAA) listed cryptocurrency-related investment scams as a top investor threat. Investigate before you invest, Rotunda said. Check out any investment offerings with your state securities regulator.

The FTC said many victims reported being lured to sophisticated websites offering an opportunity to invest in cryptocurrencies. People set up accounts using real cryptocurrencies, which would of course be stolen. The sites use fake testimonials and cryptocurrency jargon to appear credible or show that their investments were growing. However, when people tried to withdraw the nonexistent profits, they were told to send even more cryptocurrency, Fletcher said.

In other schemes, people were told the more money they put in to climb investment tiers, the bigger returns they could expect.

Even the tried and true romance scam has evolved to include cryptocurrency. But instead of getting lovestruck individuals to fork over cash, scammers sweet-talk them into cryptocurrency investments. The FTC said about 20 percent of the money reported lost through romance scams since October 2020 was sent in cryptocurrency.

Another scam involves pitches using celebrity names. You give the celebrity-backed investment some of your cryptocurrency and you supposedly get back more than you put up. Consumers reported losing more than $2 million to Musk impersonators since October, the FTC said.

Crooks are also using the Social Security number con to collect cryptocurrency. People are told their Social Security number will be “suspended” because of criminal activity. Or they are threatened with arrest. To clear up the issue, victims are told they have to pay a fee in cryptocurrency.

If you’re promised a guaranteed return, run. If you’re told that your deposit of cryptocurrency will be multiplied, don’t take the bait. “The cryptocurrency itself is the investment,” Fletcher wrote in a report about the surge in the scams. “You make money if you’re lucky enough to sell it for more than you paid. Period. Don’t trust people who say they know a better way.”

Ric Edelman, the founder of Edelman Financial Engines, said it was inevitable that criminals would exploit the interest in cryptocurrencies.

“Scams involving bitcoin are no surprise, any more than the fact that as soon as we invented cars we started having car accidents,” he said. “So drive defensively and be just as defensive when investing.”

Teen baker in California sweetens lives making desserts for those in need

By LUIS ANDRES HENAO and EMILY LESHNER
Associated Press

Vedika Jawa’s mission to sweeten the lives of those in need began when she was just 13, on a family trip to San Francisco. She could not help but see the multitudes living on the streets.

She returned home to Fremont, California, determined to help. Reaching out to homeless shelters, she offered to bake sweet treats. Some managers ignored her; others told her to come back when she was older. But she persisted.

Jawa organized a neighborhood bake sale, collected ingredients in her school and contacted a shelter’s CEO, who eventually allowed her to bake for residents. That was the start of Bake4Sake, her student-run nonprofit that distributes desserts to those in need.

During the pandemic, the project expanded from a handful of friends who helped her bake in her hometown to more than 100 volunteers who now work with 15 homeless shelters in 10 locations across the United States.

“Even though these people get access to meals from food banks and shelters, they often don’t have access to desserts,” said Jawa, now a 16-year-old high school junior.

“We know that they’re going through a really difficult time at this moment. And so, we just want to add a little bit of joy in their lives and show them that they’re cared for and loved.”

At the onset of the pandemic, her work seemed to come to a halt. Some shelters could no longer take the baked goods because they needed to follow regulations to curb the spread of COVID-19.

But she didn’t let it stop her. Through the local food bank South Hayward Parish, she eventually was allowed to deliver the desserts. She also created an Instagram Bake4Sake account, hoping to find more volunteers.

“Instead of just getting responses from my classmates, I actually started getting responses from high schoolers in different states, in different cities,” she said.

Now, she hopes that even more people will be encouraged to join her project and open their own chapters of Bake4Sake at a time when illness, job loss and business closures across America have caused a food insecurity crisis.

“So many people have lost their loved ones due to this pandemic. So many people have lost their jobs,” Jawa said. “We think that a simple act of kindness can go a long way for someone who is facing such a difficult time.”

Summer meal programs help fill that void. Summer meals give children the nutrition they need so they are ready to learn when they return to school.”

On Friday, Gogolweski said they have seen an increase in food insecurity during the pandemic “and are able to help through some grant funding.”

“We became a food program sponsor this year to take care of the kids in our program and do what we can in the community,” said Gogolweski.

The YMCA’s new initiative joins the new MSD summer food program announced last week, which will also provide weekly meals free of charge for children ages 1 through 18 throughout the MSD area. Throughout the summer, families may pick up five day’s worth of breakfasts and lunches for each child in their household that meets the age criteria from 4:30 to 5:30 p.m. Wednesdays from June 9 to July 28 at Northfield High School, 154 W. 200 North, and Southwood High School on the east side of the building, 564 Indiana 124.

Families do not need to sign up in advance for the meals.

MSD director of communications and community engagement Laura Langebartels said like the YMCA program, they can offer this expanded service due to outside funding. Their meals will be reimbursed through a program offered by the United States Department of Agriculture (USDA). On April 26, the USDA announced they would be expanding Pandemic Electronic Benefit Transfer (P-EBT) benefits.

P-EBT was established in March 2020 to provide food dollars to families to make up for meals missed when schools have closed due to COVID-19. The program was set to expire on Sept. 30, but through the American Rescue Plan Act, benefits are now available for the duration of the pandemic, including during the summer months.

Children are eligible for this temporary nutrition benefit – loaded onto an EBT card that can then be used to purchase food – if they are eligible to receive free or reduced-price meals during the school year or if they are under age six and live in a SNAP household. Families of eligible children typically receive $6.82 per child, per weekday, or roughly $375 per child over the summer months. According to the USDA, approximately 575,000 school-age children and 72,000 children not in school under the age of 6, will receive a total of $242.7 million in benefits from this program during this summer.

For more information on the new YMCA program, visit www.wabashcountymca.org or email info@wabashcountymca.org.

Sibling still wrestles with lingering effects of abuse

DEAR ABBY: I had a horrible childhood with a mean mother who berated and took her issues out on me. I also had an older brother who enjoyed making fun of me and embarrassed me in front of others to get his kicks. He still never misses an opportunity to pull a “gotcha.”

I was raised at a time when child abuse was considered making a kid tough. What it did to me was break me down emotionally. Does PTSD ever go away, or do I have to live with it to the end? – Just Getting By In New York

DEAR JUST GETTING BY: I’m sorry for the abuse to which you were subjected. PTSD does not go away on its own, and you do not have to “live with it.” Distance yourself as much as possible from your bully brother. You can find the help you need by asking your physician or insurance company to refer you to a licensed psychotherapist who specializes in patients with PTSD. You won’t be the first person to do “couch time” after an abusive childhood. Trust me on that.

DEAR ABBY: My father-in-law has spent every Friday night with my husband and me for two years, ever since my mother-in-law passed away. My husband spends every Tuesday evening with him at his house. My sister-in-law is building a room onto her house for him to live in (he is selling his house). My husband and sister-in-law call him two or three times a day.

Abby, my father-in-law is healthy and still drives. He never pays for any food – my husband and sister-in-law buy all his food. He’s a wealthy man, but stingy. I think my husband and his sister are obsessed. What do you think? I’m so tired of this. I don’t want him staying at my house. I need privacy! Help! – Over It Now In Tennessee

DEAR OVER IT: Your husband and his sister appear to be devoted to their father. Either that, or they may anticipate a big payday once their wealthy parent expires. More than privacy, you may need a break. Arrange to spend some of those Friday nights with women friends, and perhaps his presence will be less onerous.

DEAR ABBY: We welcomed new neighbors and allowed them to use our garbage can until they got one, and gave them a bottle of wine and a housewarming card. We also offered to let them use our downstairs bathroom until the contractor finished theirs. No one else on the block did anything for them. Nothing.

They then invited a neighbor and his wife over for drinks and didn’t invite us. My husband says I shouldn’t be offended by this. I certainly would have had the neighbors who had welcomed me over first. What do you think? – Snubbed In The South

DEAR SNUBBED: I think you and your husband are more than neighborly. I also think you are blessed with common sense, something your new neighbors may lack. My advice is to let this unfortunate incident slide without holding a grudge. Take the high road and move on. Nothing positive will come of allowing this to fester. Whether the couple is worth knowing better will become apparent with time.

Obsessions can bring harm to relationships

Q: The lockdown from COVID-19 has increased cabin fever like I’ve never seen. Is it so wrong to want to get out on the golf course and enjoy fresh air and exercise? My kids say I’m obsessed, but I believe there is value in wholesome activity. — G.O.

A: Obsessions can bring harm to relationships. But golf can be a useful game. When the value of what may be considered a leisurely activity is explained, often it can relieve the anxiety it may create in others. The Apostle Paul wrote about physical exercise and competition of his time. The game of golf reveals character. If a person is a good sport, or hotheaded, or dishonest, it will show up on the golf course. The environment of God’s landscape brings a certain serenity. A golf course is an island of peace in a world often full of confusion and turmoil. It’s a good escape valve for inner hostility that builds up in all of us. It affords an opportunity for fellowship, challenge, and exercise.

Golf techniques can be applied to life. “Keeping your head down,” speaks of humility. The one who looks up eagerly and proudly is bound to be embarrassed. Life is like that, too. “Keeping your eye on the ball,” denotes resolution and concentration. Many people have forgotten the real purpose of life. We have many things to live with, but many of us have forgotten what we are living for. We have to keep our eyes on Christ if we’re going to meet the overwhelming challenges of our times.

“Following through” is a lesson in persistence. These principles can be applied in other areas of life and can serve us well. Let’s always use our time to bring glory to Jesus Christ, who has blessed us with multiple ways to enjoy what He has created for our enjoyment.

Sweet and Reed highlight boys track and field sectional

Wabash finishes eighth, Southwood takes ninth, Northfield at 12th

By CLAY MAXFIELD

Three of Wabash's local high schools in Northfield, Southwood and Wabash competed on Thursday in the sectional 16 of boys track and field at Marion High School. The Apaches finished eighth as a team with a total of 46 points while Southwood ended in ninth at 31 points. Northfield rounded off the night in 12th at 17.50 points.

Southwood High School senior Braden Sweet highlighted the evening with a first-place finish in the 1600-meter with a final time of 4:30.54 while finishing nearly 10 seconds ahead of the second-place finisher.

Alex Winer also was among the group of Knights who had exemplary performances when he finished in fourth in the 200-meter dash while Isiah Sutton placed fourth in the long jump with a distance of 20'1.25".

Afterward, Southwood head coach Heather Hyden credited her seniors for leaving an imprint on a program that will be ripe with youth next season.

"We have eight seniors, they brought a lot of leadership to our underclassmen," Hyden said. "Showing them how things are done, how I prefer things to be done. There will be a big void next year when they're gone. ... As seniors, they work hard, do what's asked of them, and bring the freshmen along with them."

With the Apaches, Zachary Reed stood out as the bright spot for Wabash when he finished in first place in the 800-meters with a time of 1:57.37. Kaden Vogel also gave the Apache fans something to cheer for after placing second in the 3200-meter.

Wabash head coach Ryan Evans finished the evening pleased with his team's effort regardless of how they placed.

"They performed at or above expectations," Evans said. "I know some wanted to do better than they did but they hit PRs and ran their hardest. I'm happy as a coach when I see that."

Spencer Stout ended the night with a second-place finish for Wabash when he clocked a 42.11 time in the 300-meter hurdles.

Wabash's 4x800 meter relay team also took home third place. David Ford and Caelan Mcdougale took him fourth and fifth in the 1600 meters, respectively.

ginning of the season and focused on doing the right things. If we do the little things, then times and places will come. This is a culmination of all the little things they've been doing just to get where they are now," Evans said.

For Northfield, Kevin Buzzard placed fifth in the boys discus, throwing for a distance of 122'10". Jaxton Coyne followed in seventh place with 120'4" in the boys discus also.

Northfield head coach Adam Zwiebel finished the evening pleased with the way his team has grown, touching on their ability to compete to the fullest throughout the year.

"I'm happy that my kids throughout the season continued to set PRs and compete. It didn't matter if we were in a competition with 10 schools, five schools or two schools, my kids were competing and that's awesome to see," he said.

Wabash loses lead late to Peru

Apaches will host Fairfield High School at 10:30 a.m. today

By CLAY MAXFIELD
Wabash Plain Dealer
Freelance Reporter

The Wabash Apaches hosted Peru's varsity boys baseball team on Wednesday in a bout that started hopeful for Apache fans but ended in disappointment as Wabash fell 7-3.

The Apaches took a 3-1 lead going into the top of the fifth inning but gave up six unanswered runs in the ensuing three innings of play and dropping their 12th game of the season.

Wabash head coach Jack Holley believed that his team faltering down the stretch offensively was the cause of their demise despite the pitching prowess from Joseph Leland.

"It was a hard-fought game for the first six innings but things kind of busted open in the end," Holley said. "Peru kept us off stride and Joey (Leland) kept us in the game, gave us a chance but we just didn't capitalize on the offensive side of the ball."

Peru drew first blood in the top of the first after an error on a Peru grounder resulted in the game-opening run.

Both teams went scoreless until the bottom of the fourth when Wabash caught fire, scoring three runs in the inning thanks in part to a double off of Chayden Beeks.

Beeks led the team on offense with two hits and one RBI while Colton Learned finished with one hit and an RBI respectively.

The first two Apache scores came off of a sac fly to center field from Andrew Dillon and a ground out from Colton Learned.

Aggressiveness at the plate proved to be the biggest catalyst from Holley's vantage point as Wabash goes into the weekend with just two games remaining in their regular season as they host the Chris Rood Memorial Tournament.

"We've been talking all year about our plate approach. We have to learn to finish teams and we can't just stick back and wait. Peru is a good team and you let good teams hang around and things are going to happen like they did," he said.

Three consecutive two-run innings by Peru occurred from the fifth inning through the seventh as the Tigers tied the game at three-all with a line drive to the right field before taking the lead off of a fly ball to the left field in the top of the sixth.

Wabash gave up 11 hits in the loss while committing one error.

Despite the loss, Holley is encouraged by the strengths of his team's baserunning ability along with Leland's presence on the mound.

"Our baserunning has been really good the last three or four games," Holley said. "Whenever Joey is pitching, we have a chance in any game that he's throwing. ... We just have to be a little sharper in our game to make sure we don't give teams the momentum."

Wabash will host Fairfield High School (7-11) at 10:30 a.m. Saturday, May 22 in the first round of tournament play before turning their focus towards the sectional tournament.

The Apaches will host fifth-ranked Carroll High School (21-3) at 5 p.m. Wednesday, May 26 in the first round of sectional 37.

"We're playing a really good Carroll Flora team. The young men that will be throwing against us are the real deal so we got to do things right. Put the ball in play, make them get us out and play a sound defensive game," Holley said.

Trio of Spartan track and field athletes named HCAC Athletes of the Week

Richardson, Hochstetler, Bouwens all honored

By DILLON BENDER

A trio of Manchester University outdoor track and field athletes picked up weekly athlete of the week honors from the Heartland Collegiate Athletic Conference (HCAC) on Monday, May 17.

For the second time this spring, sophomore Thomas Richardson, from Ladoga and Southmont High School, was tabbed as the HCAC Men's Track Athlete of the Week. Richardson placed sixth in the 3000m steeplechase over the weekend at St. Francis in Illinois with a time of 9:24.07. That time improves a personal best set earlier this spring and ranks him third on the all-time Manchester top 10 list. The time also stands as the 28th best time in the NCAA Division III ranks this spring.

Senior Brian Hochstetler, from Elkhart and Concord High School, concluded a sterling Black and Gold career by being named the HCAC Men's Field Athlete of the Week on Monday. Hochstetler added a fourth-place finish in the shot put at St. Francis in Illinois over the weekend. Hochstetler's final distance of 15.32m (50' 3 1/4") shattered his previous best in the event. His mark shot him up to third all-time in the Manchester record books. His throw ranks 34th in NCAA Division III this spring.

Sophomore Brooke Bouwens, from Clarksville, Michigan and Lakewood High School, picked up HCAC Women's Track Athlete of the Week for the first time in her Manchester career on Monday. Bouwens improved her time in the 400m hurdles by .67 seconds this weekend at St. Francis in Illinois. Bouwens clocked a final time of 1:08.37 at St. Francis, placing fifth in the event and bumping her up to fifth on the all-time Manchester top 10 list.
